GENERAL HEALTH & SAFETY

It is unlikely you will come across any dangerous wildlife during your visit; however, the diverse habitats of Montana and Wyoming allow for an abundance of wildlife. These states area provides habitat for some of North America’s largest animals, including elk, pronghorn antelope, big horn sheep, mule deer, bears and mountain lions. Smaller mammals include fox, mink, coyote, bobcat and rabbits. The prairie rattlesnake is the state’s only poisonous snake and can be found at lower elevations. During the Summer and Fall, it is not uncommon to see rattlesnakes in remote areas at the sites. Three species of venomous spiders are of special public concern – the black widow spider, the brown recluse spider and the aggressive house spider. The venom of these species is highly toxic to humans. For further information on venomous spiders, you may access the University of Wyoming Cooperative Extension’s web page at <http://ces.uwyo.edu/PUBS/B1050-5.pdf>. The Wyoming Game & Fish can be reached at 307.777.4600 or on the web at <http://gf.state.wy.us/>. The Montana State University Extension can be reached at 406.994.1750 or <http://extn.msu.montana.edu>.
